

PEPPERDINE UNIVERSITY

Graduate School of Education and Psychology

THE EDUCATION DIVISION announces an opening for the Rosalind Heyman Endowed Chair in Educational Administration. Preference will be given to senior candidates at the full Professor level, though consideration will be given to unusually strong candidates at the Associate Professor level. GSEP seeks to fill this position with a distinguished individual strongly committed to preparing culturally responsive and forward-looking scholar-educators at both the masters and doctoral level. Applicants should possess a doctorate in educational administration, organizational leadership or related field; substantial school or school system leadership; teaching experience; and a strong record of prior and current scholarship appropriate for an endowed chair position. Special consideration will apply to candidates with a proven ability to attract grant funds from federal, state or private sources. Pepperdine's highly regarded programs are especially well-known for building strong and vibrant communities of students and faculty who effectively serve schools, school systems, or other organizations that they represent. The graduate degree programs this position will serve most directly include the Educational Leadership Academy (ELA) MS program and the Educational Leadership and Policy (ELAP) EdD. Send all materials to: Dr. Eric Hamilton, Associate Dean, Graduate School of Education and Psychology, Pepperdine University, 6100 Center Drive, Los Angeles, CA 90045, or email to eric.hamilton@pepperdine.edu.

Applications should include: a letter that indicates teaching, clinical, and research interests; a statement regarding the applicant's participation in a community of faith; a vita that includes the names of three references; and reprints of selected publications. Review of applications will begin February 15, 2010, and will continue until the position has been filled.

The students at the Graduate School of Education and Psychology represent the diverse mosaic of Southern California, with over thirty per cent of our student body from ethnically/racially diverse populations. Pepperdine places a high priority on sustaining a multiculturally responsive faculty and encourages applications from candidates who will enrich and contribute to diversity at Pepperdine. Pepperdine University is an independent Christian university related to the Churches of Christ, committed to the highest standards of academic excellence and Christian values, where students are strengthened for lives of purpose, service, and leadership. Pepperdine University is an Equal Opportunity Employer.